CONJUNCTIONS

Conjunctions are words that join together words, phrases or sentences. They are like the links that join together railway wagons. Here are some examples.

'and' joins two words: Peter and Tina.
'and' joins two phrases: Along the street and round the corner.
'but' joins two sentences: John works badly but he plays games well.
The woodcutter looked at the gold axe but refuse to take it.
Will you have the gold axe or will you have the silver axe?

Here is a long 'train' joined by conjunctions. It isn't a very good sentence because it has too many conjunctions in it, but it will show you what conjunctions can do.

The woodcutter looked at the gold axe and he looked at the silver axe but he chose the wooden axe because he was an honest man so the fairy gave him all the axes.
